WHEELING:

Tuesday Morning, Feb. 19, 1861. ANOTHER Southern revolt, that of South-Carolina against the Montgomery Confederacy, is rapidly becoming a fixed fact .-The most obstinate folks in the world are the cotton lords and cotton leaders about Charleston. They wont keep step of their own accord to the music of the Union, or any other music; they can't be driven into it, nor they can't be coaxed .-That South Carolina is "brave to a fault". we don't mean to deny. As proof of it look how fearlessly she threatened Uncle Sam, for weeks, that if he didn't take the spunky garrison out of Fort Sumter, she would do it for him; and how when said Uncle concluded not to remove Major Anderson, she resolutely came to the same conclusion. No, we don't intimate that the Palmetto State isn't brave enough for ordinary occasions, but the difficulty is she is not big enough;-there is not enough of her, her territory is not sufficiently excensive; her people are far apart and not nearly as numerous as they might be. This was the cause of her sad mishaps in the Montgomery Convention. The reason why she couldn't get a constitution and a President to suit her, was that she hadn't a sufficiency of votes. - And now that she has been out voted, she proposes to repudiate the action of the Convention. Mr. Spratt, one of the leading spirits of Charleston, and a powerful champion of the opening of the slave trade, comes out in the Mercury in an address of five columns, in remonstrance against the new constitution. Says Mr. Spratt:

"If the clause (against the slave trade) be carried into the permanent government, our whole movement is defeated." It will abolitionize the border States-it will brand our institution. Slavery cannot share a government with Democracy; it cannot bear a brand upon it; thence another revolution. It may be painful, but we must make it. The Constitution cannot be changed without it. It is doubtful if another movement will be so peaceful; but no matter, no power but the convention can avert the necessity."

Now, that is very nice talk, but Messrs. Spratt, Rhett, & Co. must bear in mind that they will have Gen. Jeff. Davis to deal with, instead of Mr. Buchanan; and that, as he is of a different school, he might insist on taking them through a course of sprouts essentially different from the non-coercion policy they have been accustomed to.

We cannot help thinking that this is a bad beginning for the new nation. If such determined hostility is to be incurred right at the outset, what will it not be when the edicts of the Convention go fully into effect-when they begin to bear down on the tax payers -- when they make drafts for the military-when, in short, they begin that system of extortion and oppression which is the infallible resort of such governments as is about to be inaugurated. When the Southern people have felt the weight of their Executive's power, they will begin to wince, and ere long there must be a general reaction, not for causes of which South Carolina complains, but for others infinitely more just and potent.

If South Carolina determines not to submit, Gen. Davis is the kind of a man to determine that she shall; and so it is not impossible that folks down that way may have some fan, all to themselves.

THE special committee of the Peace Congress appear to have agreed upon Mr. Guthrie's resolutions-which we published last Thursday morning-with some slight alterations. It is thought that these propositions will not even be acceptable to a majority of the Conference: and inasmuch as the Republicans who are members of it are not exactly representative men-willing to concede more than the mass of Republicans would sustain them in doing-it is scarcely to be expected that even should the proposition pass the Peace Congress, such a recommendation could be carried through Congress. If the recomendations of this Conference should so fail, they will do much more barm than good, for this fact will tend to intensify the feeling in the Border slave States, and give a mothold for secession to say that all hope of reconciliation is at an end .-WE have heretofore expressed the opinion that the intensifying, at a critical juncture, of the secession feeling in Virginia, with a view to precipitate the action of the Convention, was the secret motive of the originators of the Peace Conference. We have not yet seen anything in its action to the contrary; and, in further confirmation, it will be observed that, as vet, the Convention at Richmond is doing nothing , but awaiting the action of the Conference. Our Richmond correspondent takes a hopeful view of things, and thinks that secession stands no chance. We believe it will fail. but if it do, it will be for no want of engineering on the part of its leaders.

A petition has been presented to the Minnesota Senate by from twenty to thirty Sioux Indians, asking the legislature to grant to them al! the rights of citizenship. They stated that they had adopted a number of customs in vogue among the whites. such as wearing pantaloous, living in houses, using knives and forks, being content with the possession and control of one wife, being willing to earn their bread "by the sweat of their brows," total abstinence from intoxicating liquor, regular attedance upon "stated preaching," &c.

STEWART, the New York dry goods millionare, was so much pleased with something that Fanny Fern wrote, that he sent her the richest silk dress pattern he had in his store.

FROM RICHMOND.

The Weather in Richmond, and the People-The Scenes in Convention Some of the Characters of the Body-Gov. Wise Appears on the Boards and Opens the Ball.

RICHMOND, Feb. 15, 1861. Certainly there could not be more beau-tiful weather anywhere in the world than constraints and a great Union stickthere is at this time in this city. The ler, got up and perpetrated a laughable take off on Wise's exportation, saying, May, and no one thinks of putting on an Jent? I can't understand it, sir. Here better the carry in the morning or we have been hurrying them. late in the evening. The good people of ganization in pieces of three days, and as this ancient town are enviably favored in point of climate, possessing, perhaps, the Why sir, said he, I don't think it is conpoint of climate, possessing, perhaps, the most desirable one of any section of the consistent with the dignity and gravity of United States. I have been here three times at about this time of year and have nover found the weather less grateful to the feelings than now. I am told that it is pretty much on this order the winter through. The effects of this outward geniality is risible in the appearance of the people. You meet with a great many old and elderly people in proportion to the population of a city of this size, and what impresses a strauger, is that they all seem to look so well kept, too. They have a plethors of body and face that betokens hale constitutions and favorable chances for longevity. I recollect that Caleb Cushing, two or three years ago, made a speech before the United States Agricultural Fair in this city, in which he said that there was a belt or zone of country bounded by Philadelphia on the North, and the lower line of Virginia on the South, and stretching from the Atlantic coast to the Mississipi river, in which the grade of people, of horses and cattle, were of a much higher development than in the country either North or South of it. He attributed the difference to climate and soil, and I am inclined, from all I have observed since reading his speech, to think it is consumpted to this body to rush the digit of the distant with the distant many. Everybody laughted at this, of course, except the disministent with the disministent with the disministent with the disministent with the distant many. Everybody laughted at this, of course, except the disministent with the dish to rush the said what is par thing in what he said. He made a special emphasis in speaking of the ladies of the strip of country referred to: and I think that he is borne out by the appearance of those you meet on the streets and in the hotels here. It would be hard to find more attractive specimens of the sex than many of the "country cousins" who are solourning in the city during the sex in a supposition of it bloods. sojourning in the city during the sessions of the legislature and the convention. It the State out of the Union. This, also, Stuart denied—that is, that part of it lor's visit to have the previous of tackle.

Speaking about personal appearances, I have an item or two to remark upon that head. During yesterday and to-day, the time of the Convention has been in good part consumed by nominations for the different offices necessary for the organization of the Convention. For almost every office there were, on an average, a dozen nominees, (the offices are salaried,) and each nominee had his brace of advocates, one of whom anyonged him and the resi one of whom announced him, and the rest seconded the nomination, and passed colo-gies on the nominee. All kinds of reas-ons were given wny Mr. "Jeems" so and so should be elected Secretary, Sergeant, Door-keeper or Page. The most common reason, next to being "poor and worthy," advanced, was upon the score of "personal pulchritude." Some eight orten candidates were recommended for the grace of their person. Their fine and impasing appears. were recommended for the grace of their person. Their fine and imposing appearances were eloquently dwelt upon. Some member put the cap sheaf on this style of recommendation by saying that his nominee was not a very handsome man, but his wife was a very beautiful woman, and had five very likely children Mr. Wm. C. Scott, of Powhatan, struck off on a new tack—one which created a great deal of merriment—and said that his client was not a very good looking man as he knew of, but has had another and much higher claim on the Convention. He quoted that tradition of the old Romans that was said to ennoble a man when he had become the father of a certain number of children, and said that his unnince, although only arout father of a certain number of children, and said that his nominee, although only about 54 years of age, was the known father of 18 children. Another men was a grey hound that is not still the says that he reminded him always of a grey hound that in a thin always of a speaking of "personal pulchritude" re-minds me that there are some very fine specimens of manhood, especially of "green old age," In the Convention. John Janold age," In the Convention. John Janney, of Loudon county, the President, is a noble and most loveable looking old man.

His hair is long, heavy, white as snow and soft as ailk. It falls most strikingly on either side of his winning face with an inexpressible grace of appearance. To see him is to be drawn right to him in admiration. He is tall and commanding, and looks like one of Washington Irving's finest models of a British Peer of the Realm world, yet has that great firmness, readi-ness, tact, and more than all, that winsome courtesy and goodness of heart that wineminently fit him for presiding over such a mass of incongruous elements as they have in this Convention. He is n selfmade man, having raised bimself from obscurity, and has been for most of his long

He is the colleague from the county of Fred. erick, of Robert T. Conrad, also of Winchester, and this delegation is said to be one of the strongest in the Convention. Mr. Tomas in a lawyer of sminners being re-Conrad is a lawyer of eminence, being remarkable, as Gov. Wise told him, for his "subtle reflection." He it was who to-day offered the resolution providing that sill offered the resolution which should be submitted to the Convention touching our Federal relations should be consigned, "at once and without debate," to a committee of 21. Gov. Wise pitched into this resolution. The form of the part of Mr. Caidwell, who contended that such a provision would stop all the manufacturies in Wheeling before thirty once and without debate," to a committee of 21. Gov. Wise pitched into this resolution, as you will have seen ere this, and spread himself on it in the most rhodomontal style, declaring that he would never have his inclination to debate cramped up in "any such miserable Chinese shoe." And talking about Wise, he seems destined to play pretty much the same part in this Convention which he did in that of 1851, the time when he made his famous six day speech, and so broke down famous six day speech, and so broke down the reporters and broke up the public print- view, and on his motion the bill and er, who swore he never contracted to publish the debates with Henry A. Wise's morrow, to give him time to redraft the morrow, to give him time to redraft the speeches included. You ought to have seen Wise to-day. He only got here last night, and he wasn't in town ten minutes, nor in the Convention either, until he made a speech. They were electing a Times says:

Speaking about personal appearances, I

It was the impression of everybody that the persons who had disclosed this con-versation to Wise, had acted a very low and mean part. Don't you think so, yourself? Notwithstanding, however, this general conviction, almost every one thought Stuart should have stood up to Wise bet-ter, and let him know that, after all, that ter, and let him know that, after all, that he (Wise) wasn't a character (after all that he had done; to become so virtuously in-dignant all at once about rumors that he intended to foment treason in some way Stuart had a tempting chance to make a telling point against Wise, but everybody says he hadn't the pluck to do it.

Of Wise's speech after he got through with Stuart, I couldn't begin to write you. It was a rambling disquisition on you. It was a rambling disquisition on hot blood -a boast of the policy that he 18 children. Another man was recommended because he had served his contry in Mexico; but this qualification, in the opinion of the secessionists, was rather a disparagement than otherwise.—
And thus the time of the Convention, for the past three days, has been pretty much consumed in nominating and eulogizing persons for the offices of the Convention. It was finished up to day by the manimous placing on a felligit of the light and subject, strikulation of felligits of the light and subject; strikulation of the content of the light and subject; strikulation of the content of the light and t ing out in telling style, and just as you are looking for him to make a point, be turns off and shoots away in another di-

Thereupon Mr. Armstrong, of Hampsbire county, offered an amendment provi-

made a speech. They were electing a second door keeper when he came in and the first ballot proved to be unsuccessful, and so the president directed the Secretary to call the roll again. This fired up Wise. Said he, "Mr. President what means this fiddling while Rome is burning? A great piece of business this, said he, to be stalling and halting the deliberations of this great body over a petty affair like a door keeper's election. Let anybody be chosen, either the highest or the lowest on the list, but don't diegrace yourselves in the eyes.

O TO WYRES' GALLERY AND SEE THE COTOWARES' GALLERY AND SEE THE Crowls that daily resort there to obtain his weil known superior pictures, which he is now selling at greatly refuced prices, for a short time.

Being fally determined that no gallery in the city shall under sell him, and at the stime time is prepared to take better pictures than can be obtained obsewhere, or charge nothing for them.

The public will remember that five premiums were awarded to Wykes, for less pictures of the various kinds and styles, at the late fair on the Island.

Those wishing pictures should call as sarry in the day as possible, or make previous arrangements, to prevent long delay.
